

6 THINGS ABOUT BEING A VHS COLLECTOR

- 1. VHS Tapes Existed in 1977. Ever since Betamax was first invented the same year, The first VHS tapes were made by Magnetic Video Corporation. Then in 1980, The first Disney VHS Tapes were Mary Poppins and Pete's Dragon. Then here comes Laserdisc, which is the largest and the oldest DVD ever to compare the size of vinyl records.
- 2. VHS Tapes Died in 2007. The last Disney VHS Tapes are Cars and The Little Mermaid Platinum Edition. DVDs are taking over the VHS Tape Empire. Then lamely and unfortunately, Blu-Rays also took over the VHS Tape Empire. I hate Blu-Rays in my opinion.
- 3. The Two of the Rarest VHS Tapes I used to own in my Childhood: are MLP: The Princess Promenade and War of the Worlds. Nowadays, VHS Tapes from 2005-2007 are extremely RARE and hard to find; even at thrift stores.
- 4. My very first VHS Collection was interesting and it existed back in 2007. My first VHS tape is a Rugrats VHS tape, and I got it sealed when I first got it. After that, I opened the tape out of the shrink wrap.
- 5. Newer devices such as a Kindle Fire Stick, a Chromecast, or a Roku can be recorded onto VHS Tapes. If you want to see the updated directions, go to: <https://archive.org/details/MyPDFFiles2022Cthomsikkerhed/All%20My%20How-To%20s%29%20I%20Written%20On%20Paper%20Typed%20Digitally%20/>. To see the steps, you can record anything you want to record by using a VCR and a Kindle Fire Stick, a Chromecast, or a Roku.
- 6. Blank videocassettes are expensive on the internet and they are hard to find at thrift stores. Blank media like DVDs and VHS tapes are cheap nowadays at thrift stores.
